Empathy Map Canvas

An empathy map is a simple, easy-to-digest visual that captures knowledge about a user's behaviours and attitudes. It is a useful tool to help teams better understand their users. Creating an effective solution requires understanding the true problem and the person experiencing it.

Persona: Credit Card Applicant

A working adult applying for a credit card through a bank's online channel, whose approval currently depends on the Credit Card Approval Prediction System's risk-prediction model.

THINK & FEEL • “Will I actually get approved, or will this hurt my credit score for nothing?” • Worried that one late EMI years ago will define them forever • Hopes the process judges their overall history, not just one number • Wants to feel it's fair, not a black-box decision	SEE • A short online form asking for income, job type, education, family details • Other banks/apps offering instant approvals • Friends and social media posts about rejected applications • A dark, modern web page with a single 'Check My Application' button
HEAR • Friends complaining about long, opaque bank approval processes • Bank staff citing vague 'risk policy' reasons for rejection • News about AI being used to speed up (or unfairly bias) loan decisions	SAY & DO • Fills in income, employment and family details as accurately as possible • Double-checks whether they own a car or property, since it might help • Submits the form and waits anxiously for the Approved/Rejected result • Screenshots the result to share with family or complain about
PAIN • Rejections with no clear explanation • Long processing times before an outcome is known • Feels penalized for gaps in employment or a thin credit history	GAIN • An instant, clear Approved / Rejected result • Confidence that the assessment used their real financial behaviour • A sense the process was quick and fair • Understanding of what to improve if rejected

• Anxiety that the decision is a mysterious black box
